We will take a walk to the National Park and admire the waterfalls from special observation platforms located high above them. Multi-ton streams of water form a huge number of waterfalls of various shapes and heights, over which multi-colored rainbows hang. The impressions from this spectacle will remain with you for the rest of your life. Particularly impressive is the waterfall called Devil's Throat, which is the largest of the waterfalls. The national park covers an area of 55,500 hectares, which preserves a diverse and unique flora and fauna unique to this region.

Day 6 - Iguazu

A rich excursion program awaits you. The Foz de Iguassu waterfalls, located on the border of Brazil, Argentina and Paraguay, are 275 huge streams of water falling from a terrible height. The waterfalls are located in a national park with unique flora and fauna; they arose as a result of a volcanic eruption and displacement of earth layers. The name of the waterfalls translated from Guaranese means “big water”. 275 waterfalls, each of which has its own name, crash down into the Devil's Throat gorge. The contrast between the calm and even lazy flow of the waters of the Iguassu River above the waterfalls and the powerful overthrow of seething streams of water from a height of 72 meters into the abyss is amazing. You can stand for hours without stopping, contemplating this spectacle and thinking about the splendor and eternity of our universe. (With a Russian-speaking guide)
